PROFESSIONAL BOOKS

Grades K–5

Small Groups, Big Results

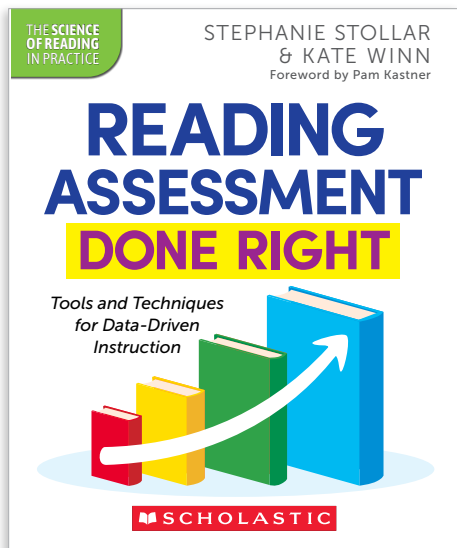

Julia B. Lindsey

Teachers have so many questions about small-group instruction these days—and with this book, Julia Lindsey provides the answers. She explains how to identify specific needs that students typically have—and then how to respond with instructional moves based on empirical research. This targeted, purpose-driven approach—sometimes requiring only five minutes a day—moves the needle for readers at every point on the developmental spectrum. Small Groups, Big Results offers a practical framework for planning instruction, plus over 20 actionable teaching routines to build better readers. 160 pages.

Reading Assessment Done Right

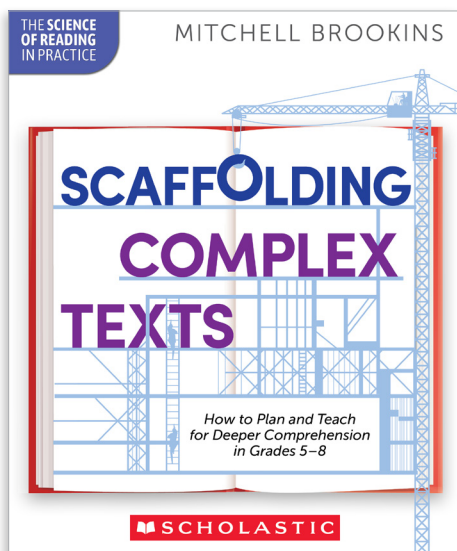

Stephanie Stollar and Kate Winn

This book informs and empowers frontline teachers to use effective, evidence-based assessments to screen, diagnose, and monitor their students. It demystifies assessment to help teachers improve reading outcomes for all students. When assessment is done right, teachers recognize its true power: They can confidently use data to pinpoint student needs, target instruction, and track progress. 160 pages.

Scaffolding Complex Texts

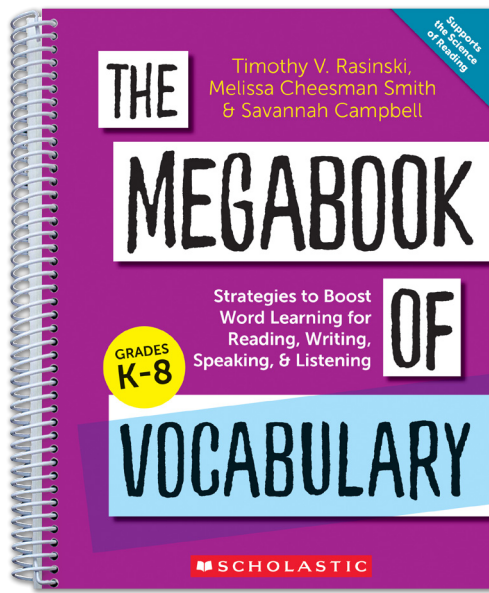

Mitchell Brookins

This book challenges the idea that using simple texts to teach students reading below grade level is the best approach. It argues that although authentic complex texts are more demanding, reading them fosters critical thinking, vocabulary growth, and a deeper understanding of the world. Literacy expert Mitchell Brookins offers a framework for supporting students in Grades 5–8 as they engage with complex texts, guiding them through syntax and text features, while building their fluency, vocabulary, and writing skills. 160 pages.

The Megabook of Spelling (Grades 3–5)

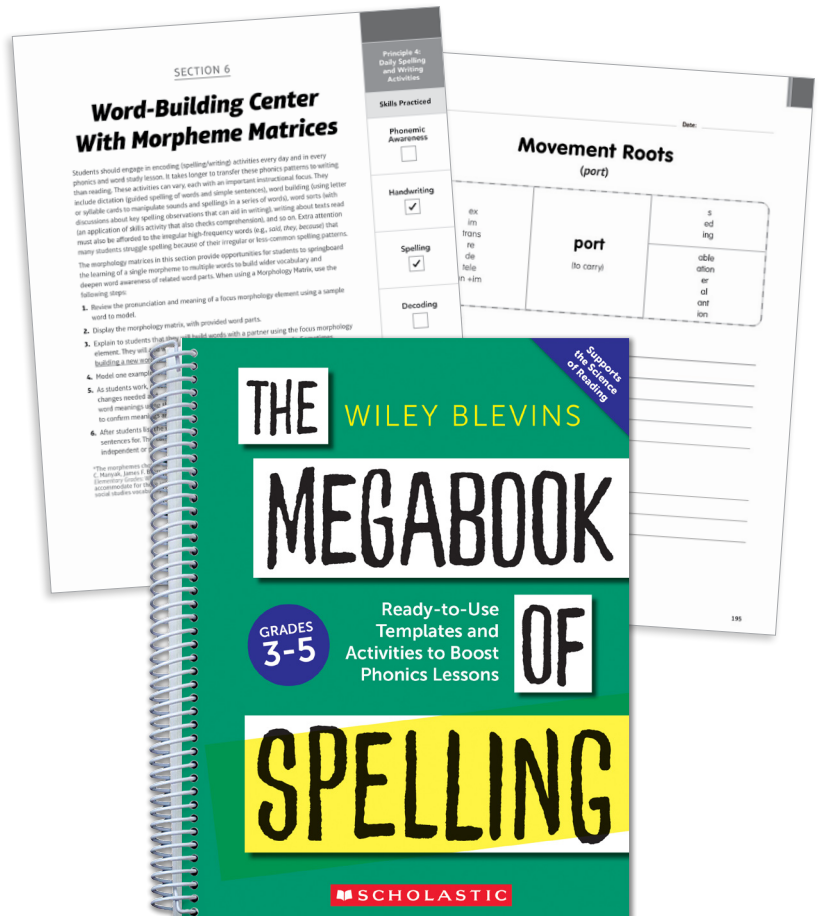

Wiley Blevins

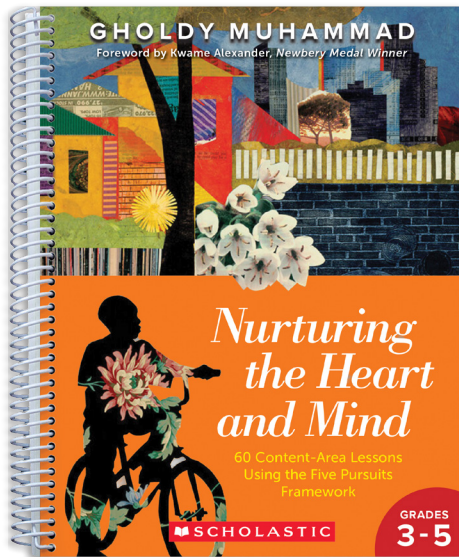

Word study is to intermediate grades as phonics is to primary grades. Older students face multisyllabic words, which can be challenging to read and write. The key is to help them identify common spelling patterns and large chunks of words they can sound out. This extensive resource focuses on morphology and its powerful link to spelling. Includes dozens of ready-to-use activities to help students master syllabication, morphemes, word parts, and more. 320 pages.

Anxiety in the Classroom

Eli Lebowitz and Rebecca G. Etkin

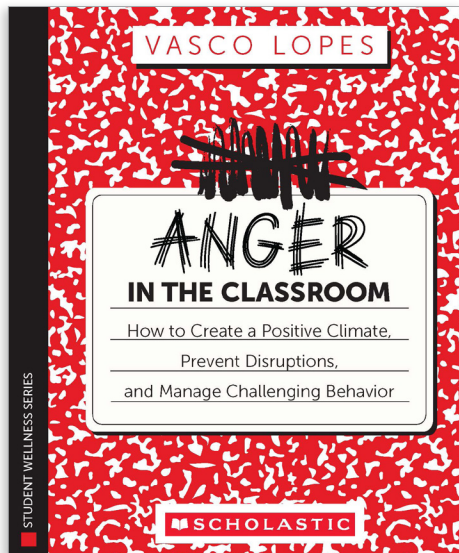

Anxiety deeply impacts every aspect of a child's school experience, including academics and learning, interactions with peers and teachers, and attendance. But school is also a place for detecting anxiety problems and helping students who struggle with it. This book provides K–5 educators with information that is key to understanding, detecting, and helping students with elevated anxiety levels, as well as guidelines for working with their parents. Packed with practical examples and research-backed intervention tools, this must-have guide empowers teachers to create a supportive classroom environment where every student thrives. 96 pages.

What Does It Take to Become a Skilled Reader? An Evidence-Based Approach

More than four decades of peer-reviewed research from educational psychology, implementation science, and neuroscience informs our understanding of reading development and instruction. This large body of scientific evidence is known as the Science of Reading.

Written by trusted literacy experts, our Science of Reading in Practice books make the leading research easy to understand and provide practical strategies and innovative ideas to help teachers implement instruction that accelerates students' reading and writing.

Adapted from Scarborough, H. S. (2001). Connecting early language and literacy to later reading (dis)abilities: Evidence, theory, and practice. In S. Neuman & D. Dickinson (Eds.), Handbook for research in early literacy (pp. 97–110). New York, NY: Guilford Press.
